“I’ve found that musicians often share a lot about the various influences in their lives—whether they be historical, political, philosophical, personal, or based on other mediums of art. They let diverse influences not only impact their work, but find ways to let them register explicitly.

It’s like musicians are hyper conscious of their lineage—they honor it and value it. So, as I continue to follow along the path and legacy of artists that came before me, lineage has become increasingly important—it’s a part of knowing from where I originated and letting that inform where I envision myself going.

The musicians on this SoundBox program could not make music all together in one place, or even at one time, but the very nature of this program—which links material that spans across almost 900 years—captures an audio and visual snapshot of how lineage can inform, influence, impact, and express itself in a musical context.”
San Francisco Symphony Music Director Esa-Pekka Salonen has, through his many high-profile conducting roles and work as a leading composer, shaped a unique vision for the present and future of the contemporary symphony orchestra. Salonen is currently the Principal Conductor & Artistic Advisor for London’s Philharmonia Orchestra and is Artist in Association at the Finnish National Opera and Ballet. He is a member of the faculty of the Colburn School in Los Angeles, where he developed and directs the pre-professional Negaunee Conducting Program. Salonen is the Conductor Laureate for both the Swedish Radio Symphony Orchestra and the Los Angeles Philharmonic, where he was Music Director from 1992 until 2009. Salonen co-founded—and from 2003 until 2018 served as the Artistic Director for—the annual Baltic Sea Festival.

“She is loved or feared, adored or disliked, but few who have met her music or glimpsed her soul react with moderation,” wrote the poet Maya Angelou of the singer, pianist, songwriter, and political activist NINA SIMONE (1933–2003). Born into a devoutly religious family in North Carolina, and named Eunice Kathleen Waymon, she received financial support from her community that enabled her to pursue musical training. She spent a summer at the Juilliard School preparing for a piano audition at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, which rejected her. She suspected racism and felt somewhat vindicated when Curtis awarded her an honorary degree in 2003, days before she died. She did continue her piano studies privately, which she afforded by performing in a dive in Atlantic City. That is when she took her stage name, to keep her mother from discovering that she was working in what she described as a “seedy little bar where old guys go to huddle over a drink and fall asleep.”

She became famous for performances that ranged through jazz, blues, folk, and gospel, and she always maintained her love of classical music, and especially of JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685–1750). Her debut album, Little Girl Blue (1958), included a cover of the Walter Donaldson/Gus Kahn song “Love Me or Leave Me” into which she interpolated an improvisation in the style of a fugue by Bach, reminiscent of the Two-part Inventions that Bach assembled into a collection for his eldest son in 1722–23. In this concert we hear Bach’s Invention in A minor, which demands independence and balance of the pianist’s hands as she traces his skeins of contrapuntal imitation. In the 1960s, Simone became an important voice in the civil rights movement, unflinching in speaking—or singing—truth to power. The two songs in this concert both relate to this aspect of her oeuvre. Simone, collaborating with composer-and-poet Weldon Irvine, released “Revolution” in 1969. It was her response to a John Lennon/Paul McCartney song the Beatles had recorded the previous year (and from which it borrows some material). Where the Beatles framed their revolution in hopefulness (“It’s gonna be all right”), Simone assumed a more challenging stance (“The only way that we can stand in fact / Is when you get your foot off our back”).

“Images,” which Simone included on her 1964 album Let It All Out, relates to the Black is Beautiful movement that was gaining force at that moment. Its lyrics, a 1926 poem by the Harlem Renaissance writer William Waring Cuney, suggest that, where a woman’s positive self-image and esteem might flourish in a liberal, natural landscape, they become stunted in an oppressive, manufactured environment. Simone’s unaccompanied song takes the form of a chantlike monody (i.e. a single vocal line). This concert connects it to “O frondens virga,” an antiphon (that is, a piece framing a psalm-setting in Catholic liturgy) composed by the medieval abbess, composer, poet, philosopher, and mystic HILDEGARD VON BINGEN (1098–1179). Its text exalts the Virgin Mary as a blooming branch that supports humankind.
The concert continues with works by two prominent Black-American composers of the twentieth century, Coleridge-Taylor Perkinson and George Walker. Perkinson (1932–2004) was born into a musical family and was named after Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, a notable Black-British composer who preceded him by half a century. Following study at New York University and the Manhattan School of Music (where he earned his master’s degree), he co-founded the Symphony of the New World in 1965. The first integrated orchestra in the United States, its mission statement declared that it would create performing opportunities for “the many talented non-white classical instrumentalists [and conductors] who have so far not been accepted in this nation’s symphony orchestras.” He would also serve as music director of Jerome Robbins’s American Theater Lab and the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater. His solo-violin piece “Plain Blue/s,” the first movement of his 1979 suite Blue/s Forms, suggests a Bach violin partita infused with inflections of the blues.

George Walker (1922–2018) was the first Black-American composer to be honored with the Pulitzer Prize for Music, awarded in 1996 for his Lilacs for Voice and Orchestra. A graduate of Oberlin Conservatory and the Curtis Institute (where he studied piano with Rudolf Serkin and earned artist diplomas on both piano and composition), he spent decades balancing a busy career as a pianist, composer, and teacher—the last most notably at Smith College (where he was the first Black faculty member to be tenured), Rutgers University (where he chaired the music department), and the Peabody Institute of Johns Hopkins University. His much-played Lyric for Strings began as the second movement of his String Quartet No. 1 (1946), where it bore the title “Lament.” He recast the movement for a full string orchestra, adding a double bass part, and it was premiered in 1947 under the title Lyric for Strings. This echoes the process that gave rise to another American string orchestra classic, Samuel Barber’s Adagio for Strings, which also began as a movement of a string quartet and preceded Walker’s piece by about a decade. As it happens, the two studied under the same composition teacher at Curtis, though they did not overlap.

San Francisco Symphony Collaborative Partner and four-time Grammy winner Esperanza Spalding (b. 1984) is widely acclaimed as a jazz bass player, a singer, and a composer. In addition to serving as Professor of the Practice of Music at Harvard, she is investigating links between music and healing. Her buoyant music reflects influences as wide-ranging as jazz fusion, Brazilian cool, and Hip Hop. At the heart of her art is improvisation, as she recounted in a recent San Francisco Symphony video profile: “Improvisation affords a kind of transparency that’s really hard to get at in other art forms. I think the ‘A-ha’ when I first touched improvisational music was like, ‘Oh, you play yourself here.’” She recently added an improvisational flair to Nico Muhly’s Throughline, a world premiere digital work commissioned by the San Francisco Symphony and performed by Symphony musicians and all eight Collaborative Partners.

by Spalding’s bandmate Aruán Ortiz, the song spins itself out gradually and revels in repeated motifs and phrases. The title is a salute to the Catalan composer Frederic Mompou (1893–1987), admired for his songs and piano miniatures. “Little Fly” was featured on Spalding’s third studio album, Chamber Music Society, released in 2010. It sets a poem by William Blake, which he published in his Songs of Experience (1794)—a self-effacing meditation on the transience of life.

ELIZABETH OGONEK (b. 1989) has served on the faculty at Oberlin Conservatory of Music since 2015 and will move this summer to Cornell University. From 2015 to 2018 she was composer-in-residence at the Chicago Symphony, where she curated that orchestra’s new-music series MusicNOW. She wrote In Silence (2016–17, for solo violin and eight players) for that series, framing it as a creative response to the “Mystery Sonatas” of the seventeenth-century composer Heinrich Biber, famous for making expressive use of scordatura—tuning the violin’s strings to unaccustomed pitches. “variations on many forms” is the second of that work’s three movements. Although she is mostly noted for instrumental music, Ogonek draws considerable inspiration from the written word. Her piano piece “In this uncontainable night,” from her Orpheus Suite (2018), was her musical response to the last of Rainer Maria Rilke’s Sonnets to Orpheus, reflecting, she says, “a certain sense of terror that I associate with the night, but then also this extreme, fragile beauty.”

FRANCIS POULENC (1899–1963) came of age in a Paris that quaked to the breakthroughs of Igor Stravinsky, Erik Satie, Serge Diaghilev, Guillaume Apollinaire, and Pablo Picasso. His Rapsodie nègre (1917) marked his debut as a composer. At the premiere, the vocal soloist was stricken by stage-fright, so Poulenc (who was no singer) leapt in to take his place. It was a great success; Maurice Ravel praised Poulenc for so convincingly inventing his own folklore, and Stravinsky arranged for a publisher to take on the emerging composer. Cultural awareness was different a century ago, and we may raise an eyebrow at Poulenc’s using a text by a presumed Liberian poet named Makoko Kangourou who was given to nonsense syllables and Parisian street slang (Poulenc admitted he was fictitious). The piece—of which we hear the last two movements of five—played into the then-universally accepted cultural appropriation, exploitation, fascination, and exoticism of African cultures, driven by French colonialism. It launched Poulenc toward the next step of his career, as a member of the Roaring Twenties avant-garde group known as Les Six.

RICKY IAN GORDON (b. 1956) is among the most appreciated of modern American vocal composers. His language often bears kinship to the style of cabaret and musical theater in addition to the art song tradition. Nearly all his music features singers, including thirteen operas, musical theater works, and “theatrical song cycles.” He has been recognized with many honors, including the prestigious Stephen Sondheim Award, and has been featured as composer-in-residence at the Bravo! Vail, Aspen, and Ravinia festivals. Recent premieres include his opera Intimate Apparel, to a libretto by Lynn Nottage, commissioned by the Metropolitan Opera and Lincoln Center Theater. His “Litany,” at once stately, contemplative, and hopeful, is drawn from his 1997 collection Only Heaven, which sets seventeen poems by Langston Hughes, a leader of the Harlem Renaissance. (The title of the poem has its own interesting history: It was first published as “Psalm” in 1931; retitled “Big City Prayer” in 1940; titled again as “Prayer 2” in 1947; and first given the title “Litany” by composer John Musto in 1986.) Gordon arranged a new version of this song for soprano, chorus, and chamber ensemble for Julia Bullock to introduce at the Metropolitan Museum in New York, where she was serving as artist-in-residence.—James M. Keller

REVOLUTION
We’re talkin’ about a revolution, because we see the face of things to come. Yes, our constitution friends, it’s gonna have to bend. I’m here to tell you about destruction of all the evil that will have to end.

Some folks are gonna get the notion, that I am here to preach hate. But if I have to swim the ocean, then I will just communicate. It’s not as simple as talkin’ jive, It’s the daily struggle just to stay alive.

Yes, I am singin’ about a revolution, because we are all talkin’ about a change. It’s more than evolution, friends, we’ve got to clean our brains. The only way that we can stand, in fact, is if you get your discriminating foot off our backs.

Alright? Alright.
Weldon Irvine, adapted by Julia Bullock

LOVE ME OR LEAVE ME
Love me or leave me and let me be lonely, You won’t believe me but I love you only, I’d rather be lonely than happy with somebody else.

You might find the night time the right time for kissing, Night time is my time for just reminiscing, Regretting instead of forgetting with somebody else.

There’ll be no one unless that someone is you, I intend to be independently blue.

I want your love, don’t wanna borrow, Have it today to give back tomorrow. Your love is my love, There’s no love for nobody else.

Gus Kahn

O FRONDENS VIRGA
O frondens virga, in tua nobilitate stans sicut aurora procedit: nunc gaude et letare et nos debiles dignare a mala consuetudine liberare atque manum tuam porrige ad erigendum nos.

Oh blooming branch, standing in your nobility, as dawn breaks: Now, rejoice and be glad, and because we are weak, consider freeing us from our bad practices; extend your hand to lift us up.

Translation: Julia Bullock
IMAGES
She does not know
her beauty,
she thinks her brown body
has no glory.

If she could dance
naked under palm trees
and see her image in the river,
she would know.

But there are no palm trees
on the street,
and dish water gives back
no images.
William Waring Cuneo

LITTLE FLY
Little fly,
Thy summer’s play,
My thoughtless hand
Has brushed away.

Am not I
A fly like thee?
Or art not thou
A man like me?

For I dance
And drink, and sing:
Till some blind hand
Shall brush my wing.

If thought is life
And strength and breath,
And the want
Of thought is death;

Then am I
A happy fly,
If I live,
Or if I die.
William Blake

LITANY
Gather up
In the arms of your pity
The sick, the depraved,
The desperate, the tired,
All the scum
Of our weary city.

Gather up
In the arms of your pity.
Gather up
In the arms of your love—
Those who expect
No love from above.
